Dear Brothers of Alpha Kappa Psi,

A few weeks ago, during my shift as a neurology nursing assistant, I witnessed death for the first time. My patient coded. I called a Code Blue, and for 23 minutes we rotated through CPR and prepared for the worst—until, miraculously, a faint pulse returned. We rushed him to the ICU alive again. That moment of fear and adrenaline also brought clarity: I thrive under pressure, value disciplined teamwork, and understand the impact of principled leadership.

My name is Ayesha Imtiaz, and I am a pre-med student majoring in public health with a minor in neuroscience. I am passionate about the intersection of healthcare, leadership, and service. I want to join Alpha Kappa Psi because I see how deeply business and medicine are intertwined—budgets, systems, and resource management are as crucial to saving lives as clinical expertise. AKPsi's mission to develop principled business leaders aligns with my vision: I hope to one day open my own medical facility, blending patient care with innovative, ethical business practices.

My background reflects AKPsi's values. In the hospital, I have learned to communicate clearly in high-stress situations and remain accountable to both patients and colleagues—just as I would with other brothers. Beyond clinical work, I have led peers in NHS, MSA, and HOSA, organizing volunteer and fundraising projects. This past March, during Ramadan, I collaborated with my high school's MSA to lead a bake sale at the Islamic Association of Greater Detroit, raising over $500 in one evening and dedicating 10% of proceeds to families in Gaza.

What inspires me about AKPsi is its commitment to shaping leaders who balance principle with impact. Just as medicine demands ethical decision-making and accountability, AKPsi emphasizes integrity and growth. I've genuinely had an amazing past week while rushing and being able to meet people of different fields. I am beyond grateful for all the brothers for being so welcoming and regardless of getting in or not, this experience will forever be memorable to me, thank you AKPsi!

I would be honored to interview with you and further share how my background, skills, and aspirations align with Alpha Kappa Psi's mission. Thank you for your time and consideration,

Sincerely,

Ayesha Imtiaz
