Dear Alpha Kappa Psi,

I'm a freshman majoring in finance. Outside of my classes, most people know me as an avid runner, a bad pool player, and an unwavering optimist. Though I cannot tell you exactly where this optimism stems from, I often associate it with my high school cross country coach. While running on her team, she showed me that most things I put my mind to are achievable, but not without nurturing the necessary skills to achieve my goal. I spend most of my free time honing my running skills to compete in half marathon races, and playing billiards in the student center on campus. I have always enjoyed the feeling of completing a race and spending time playing games with my friends. Every aspect of our lives is filled with opportunities to nurture our skills and passions, and I believe Alpha Kappa Psi is the perfect place for me to nurture the skills to become an excellent attorney.

After interning for two consecutive summers at the 36th District Court, I have handled a multitude of sensitive paperwork. The mishandling of court documents could significantly harm the lives of many vulnerable people. One lost paper hindered attorneys' defense, delayed trial dates, and extended time spent in jail or prison. Aside from responsibility, this internship taught me the importance of empathy. Handling sensitive documents taught me that one mistake really does affect lives. In my time working at the district court, I learned the importance of thorough and efficient work and the importance of bringing empathy to everything you do, especially in the workplace.

Working at Dick's Sporting Goods during the busy summer months, we often didn't have any employees assigned to be in charge of the footwear department. Meaning that if I were to be scheduled for a closing shift, I was responsible for assuming a leadership position to ensure all proper procedures were followed. Though it was overwhelming at first, I slowly began to get the hang of it. As my efficiency increased, so did my confidence in my competency. This self confidence has followed me in my current job as a student IT assistant for Wayne State University. If any technical issue arises during the time I am scheduled to work in General Lectures and Manoogian Hall, I'm in charge of solving them. Though the concept of classrooms filled with hundreds of students may seem daunting at times, I know, from experience, that with a little determination, I can manage most things. All of these experiences have shaped me as a person, and I plan to put these traits to good use at Alpha Kappa Psi.

Sincerely,

Autumn Tucker
