

Hello Alpha Kappa Psi,

My name is Annika Cho, and I am a first-year Global Supply Chain Management student at Wayne State University. I am minoring in German and Global Studies with the dream to eventually work at Adidas's Headquarters in Germany. I am a German dual-citizen, where I did an exchange semester for the second half of my sophomore year in high school. During this time, I fell in love with the experience of trying new things and getting out of my comfort zone. The new culture, school system, and way of life shifted my worldview and the friends that I made shaped my time for the better.

I also am on the Wayne State swim team, which has truly reformed the way I think about pressure, hard work, and resilience. Being a student-athlete in college made me relearn all of the traits that I thought I had perfected in high school, and it gives me an extra sense of pride to be a part of something bigger than just myself. My teammates are a large part of my growth this year, and their support has motivated me beyond what I thought was capable of. I want to center community in all of my experiences, because I learned that while it is possible to achieve things by myself, it is so much more valuable to share my wins with others. With this in mind, the bond that I have witnessed between the brothers of AKPSI is one that I admire, but also one that is familiar. The genuine friendships and will to help others is the thing that drew me to AKPSI the most, and is something that I would be honored to be a part of.

Last summer, I became the assistant treasurer at my summer swim club. Being able to take the leap from athlete to someone helping behind the scenes and making a season run smoothly was extremely fulfilling. While my experience in the business field is limited, I attempt to pour passion into anything that I do. By giving my all into all of my experiences, I get the most out of it as well, and it is a habit that I wish to maintain for the rest of my life.

Throughout the recruitment process, I have been pushed to step out of my comfort zone, adapt to unfamiliar ideas, and connect with new people that I otherwise would not have met. The entire time, the brothers of AKPSI have supported me and given me the tools that I need to succeed. It would be a great honor to be a part of this brotherhood.

Sincerely,

Annika Cho
