Dear Alpha Kappa Psi,

My name is Ankita Sinha, and it is with great enthusiasm that I submit my application to join this semester's pledge class of Alpha Kappa Psi. As a current freshman finance major, I've come to realize that my personal interests directly impact and correlate to my academic success in college this year. My passion for books, music, and film helped develop critical thinking, and creative interpretation within these medias prepared me for how truly important a detailed eye is in data and statistical analytics. learning data and statistical analysis. My love for thrifting and spending money to repurpose clothes helped shape my perspective on resource management and scarcity in our environment. This, combined with understanding market dynamics and corporate ownership while learning about investing, initiated my desire to understand economic careers that focus on public policy, and professions within business that prioritizes social impact and fulfillment over monetary gain. Even developing my sense of humor and comedic timing trying to befriend strangers has ingrained the importance of individualized, diverse communication and interaction, and how to adapt to connect with different types of people. This being said, I know that being a part of Alpha Kappa Psi is my next learning experience for college success.

This drive for an experience and impact within Alpha Kappa Psi isn't just for the benefit of my own path, but it's backed by a deep sense of loyalty and dedication to the communities I join and the values I stand by. I don't believe in doing anything half haphazardly or "just barely," because my goal is grit, not perfection. When I first joined our new college radio station this semester, only 4 members were in attendance. Today, we have 8. While this may seem like a small jump to some, I am committed to staying the course until we have 10, then 15, then 30. To me, this is a lesson in integrity; I believe in showing up and building the foundation even when the room is nearly empty. I had the same values when I co-founded my high school's literary magazine. Our team worked tirelessly for a year with no guarantee of success or sales, yet our shared effort and service resulted in distributing over 90 copies after receiving over 160 creative submissions. These experiences taught me that hard work without fulfillment isn't work at all. This is why, instead of simply checking boxes with every possible elective, I chose to dedicate eight years to the Orchestra. My peers gave me the knowledge to build me into a better player while I helped build them up too. I learned that ambition is joint and shared amongst a community; it is a form of unity that I carry with me to Wayne State and the brotherhood in Alpha Kappa Psi.

All of the values that Alpha Kappa Psi emphasizes and encourages are the same ones I have lived by for years, and I want to be part of a community that stands for exactly what I believe in. I am looking to truly make an impact on the chapter's future by combining social and community impact with traditional business roles, and to help prove that business leaders should be defined by their purpose as much as their profession. Growing with the brothers would mean helping the chapter grow alongside me. I would love the opportunity to share more about my vision and dedication during an interview. Thank you for your time, your consideration, and for providing a space where I can aspire for anything.

Sincerely,

Ankita Sinha
